Once again, the folks with the deep pockets are crying foul when new products threaten the old money radio/TV station owners. Satellite radio offers a "real" choice over the obscene and insane babble of virtually every radio station today and the "questionable" television programming offered today. Since I choose to "pay" for my radio... is that a bad thing? XM should be allowed to offer programming that allows them to compete for my business. I shouldn't have to listen to Howard Stern to get my weather and traffic information that I seek. Our country was founded on a "competitive" world.... today's TV & radio stations should offer a better product and they will be able to survive just as the cable companies have learned to sharpen their services, products, and pricing due to the introduction of the DBS competitors like DISH and DirectTV. Cable today is a far better product than it was just ten years ago.
